While having a friend cosmic overtone help you make a few bumps on your career path a little less annoying, 'Resilience and grit' are pivotal skills in the journey to success.

Young people must look beyond challenges as external hardships are often the catalyst for internal breakthroughs

According to Mr Bhero, a renowned 'convener 360 mentorship', a good financial plan is one with activities you can start acting on immediately with the least amount of money at hand.

To become a business mogul, you do not have to start big.

The aphorism,
"So as the man thinketh in his heart, so he is"

Starting a business from the ground up sparks a heightened levels of effort.

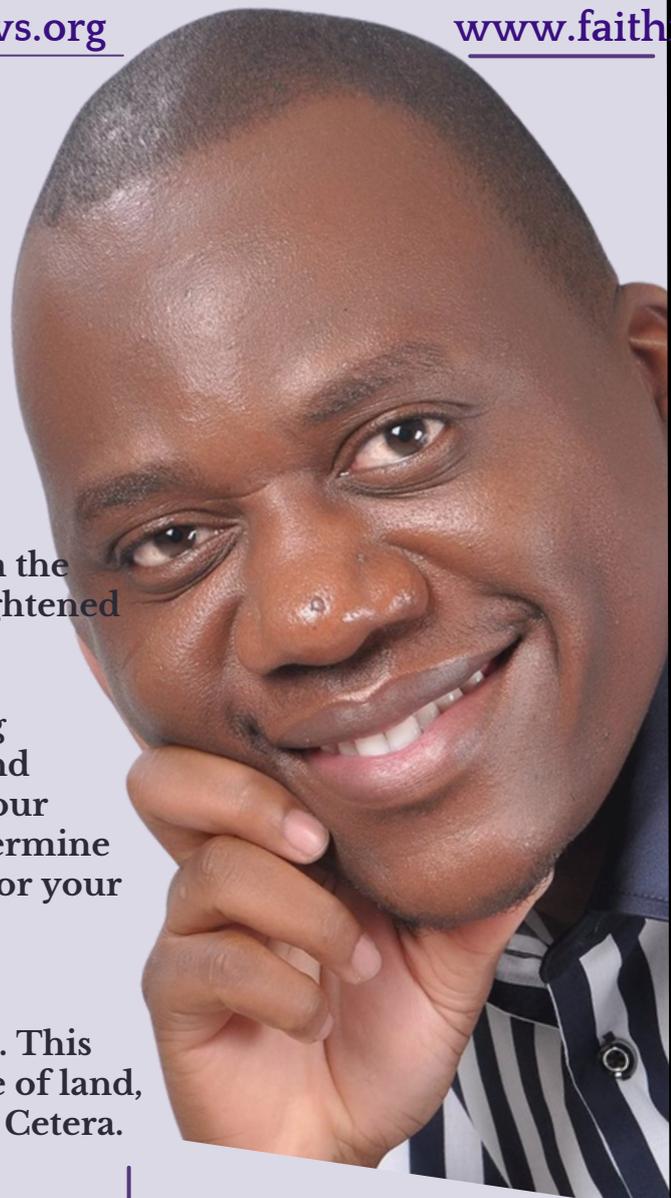

Start by clearly defining your financial vision, and sum-up by reviewing your current situation to determine how much is available for your goal.

Capital is anything that can lead to productivity. This could be an idea, a piece of land, money, a good name Et Cetera.

"You can be given a million worth of shillings but without a tenable idea, chances are, you will reduce that sum of money to the level of your mind set."

You can fail to start if your mind set is already settled on money

If you want to transform your community, the multiplication process is inevitable. Begin by self-transformation; your identity, then the next person in that order.

Don't be too ambitious. Start small!

Keep your eyes wide open while carrying out your daily tasks, as you might see a glitch that can invite solutions and lead your business into a turn-around in your business by unlocking world class business opportunities.

This is one step to equipping young people to break out of poverty as well as improving their economic resilience by impacting their communities
